How To Have an Affair

In this special edition of GFE, we delve into the world of infidelity, of adultery and of cheating. The world of affairs, divorces and broken marriages.

What is an Affair?

“Oh duh” you’d be saying, that’s simple you say. “An affair is when you cheat.”

Yeah sure smarty two shoes. But what is cheating? Is it when you look at another man or woman lustfully or is it the act of copulation that seals the affair as true?

A dictionary definition of an affair (in the context of marital infidelity) is when a married individual has a physical relationship with a party to whom they are not married. Or so you would think. My dictionary under the listing “affair” simply says: “celebrated or notorious happening; Love affair.” Love affair?! I guess the topic is more subjective to each person’s opinion to what an affair really is.

Some people may say a married man or woman already initiated an affair by looking at another in lust. Others would say intercourse. Or any kind of sexual misdemeanor. Others would argue back to the thoughts of lust. It’s all in the head they would say – the emotional attraction determines the commitment to infidelity.

Because it is subject to personal interpretation an affair is often defined by the offended spouse.

Types of Affairs

There are two primary categories with which affairs fall into. One is physical and the other is emotional.

The physical type of affair is purely that: the relationship is primarily sexual. You don't want to break up your current marital arrangements. You just want to get down and dirty more often than you are currently and probably in unusual locations.

The emotional type of infidelity is the type where you eventually hope to leave your current marriage in a divorce.

Should You Cheat?

You're probably in a rut deciding whether to cheat or not to cheat. That is the question.

You may have become disappointed about your marriage, where your expectations haven't been met. Or you may be just a daydreamer wishing of the days of open relationships be back. Women who do cheat, do it to find love and affection.

The fact of the matter is, about half of marriages now end up in divorce. Many marriages fail, and others may fall out of love.

But the answer is in you. Only you can make the final decision. Culturally and socially we have been persuaded to the fact that cheating your spouse is morally wrong. But in your case, physically and emotionally it may be the right thing to do.

I cannot get onto my moral soapbox and start extolling moral virtues to persuade you to change your mind. Should you cheat? Well if you don't a decision now, that decision may be made for you in the heat of the moment.

If you do have an affair – and you're the one who is out all day work-ing; it's easy for you to make excuses to leave work early and getting home late. You're even free to do things during lunch. If you are self-employed and work from home, you could go on that “business trip” where you can have evenings to do as you please. If you're a woman, you can often use the “shopping” excuse.

10 Rules to Having an Affair Without Getting Caught

If you do decide to have an affair, prepare to spend a lot of time in planning and due diligence. Here are ten rules to follow when you are having an affair so you don't get caught by your partner. How to get away with infidelity:

- 1) Cover your tracks: watch your phone bills: is it itemized? Can the bill be viewed online instead?, be watchful of your email communications, be mindful of your internet history on your browser. Don't use your home phone or cell phone. Get a Post Office Box.
- 2) Meet on Neutral Ground. Don't bring your lover to your home. And never go to your lover's home – unless they are single of course.
- 3) Don't give your lover your home number.
- 4) It's a small world after all. Chances are you and your spouse know a lot of people. Try to minimize your time in public and keep a low profile.
- 5) Because of (4), its probably best to meet your lover far away from home.
- 6) Keep it a REAL secret. Minimise the number of people who know about your infidelity.
- 7) Keep your promises. And don't make promises you can't keep. If you break 'em, your lover may be prompted to contact your spouse.
- 8) Keep regular schedule & don't change your routine. The dates with your lover should be at regular times so as to not draw suspicion from your spouse. So if you have a monthly business trip at a certain date and time, make sure that schedule is kept.
- 9) You aren't James Bond. Don't become overconfident in your deception abilities. You aren't 007 and getting too cocky may lead to mistakes in covering your tracks.

- 1) Enjoy your time. Yes you are in an affair. Yes you are stressed about being discovered. But make sure you take a step back every now and then to enjoy and think about what you are accomplishing.

7 Bonus Rules Of Infidelity

For being such a great cheat, here are seven further rules to follow to ensure you don't get caught by your other significant half.

- 1) Keep your interest with your current partner and family. Whatever you were doing before, keep doing it. Don't arouse suspicion.
- 2) Alibi. You need a strong alibi. Find a willing partner in crime: one of your friends who you can really trust. That friend should be known to your spouse but not necessarily best of friends to each other.
- 3) Don't change your wardrobe. Yes, that suspicion thing again.
- 4) Watch the money trail. Yes this is the same as covering your tracks. Separate bank accounts, a PO Box – nothing sent to your home address.
- 5) No new sex positions please. You may have learnt a new thing or two with your lover. But please not with your spouse.
- 6) Don't change at all. Same as (3) but also keep mindful of changes in your character, habits and interests which may have rubbed off on you from your lover.
- 7) Change. Any change you do decide to make, involve your family. Change of wardrobe: family spending spree. Change of career: tell your family. Change of fitness level: have your family join you.
